NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Medford Weather:

A strong ridge will produce another day of near record high temperatures. There will be a change to a moister pattern this weekend though the cooler readings will still be generally above normal.

A ridge of high pressure will continue to bring above normal temperatures and dry conditions today. Shower chances will increase over northwestern California starting Friday and continue into next week as multiple storm systems affect the region.

Reno Weather:

Warm and dry weather will continue today. A change to a cooler and wetter pattern will begin late Friday and through this weekend as low pressure moves across California and Nevada. A few thunderstorms are also possible Saturday. Additional storm systems may bring chances for more precipitation through next week.

San Francisco Weather:

Cooler temperatures are expected today as onshore flow returns to the area along with an increase in cloudiness. A chance of showers will return this evening and persist through much of the weekend with the potential for thunderstorms south of San Francisco Bay on Saturday.

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

After the warmest temperatures of the year so far an unsettled weather pattern will return to the desert southwest late Thursday and continue well into next week. This will lead to much cooler temperatures along with decent chances for rain.
